DETAILED ANALYSIS

Employment of veterans as unlicensed teachers

The bill revises the law that permits a school district to employ as a teacher an eligible U.S. armed forces veteran who does not hold an educator license. The bill extends the authority to community and STEM schools.¹ It also changes the eligibility requirements for a veteran and requires a veteran to register with the Department of Education. Further, it requires a veteran to have an assigned mentor who meets prescribed qualifications. Finally, it provides an exception to the “properly certified or licensed” teacher requirement, permitting an eligible veteran to teach in a core subject area.

Eligibility

The following table compares the eligibility requirements a veteran must meet to qualify to be employed as an unlicensed teacher under current law and the bill.

Current law	S.B. 14
The veteran was honorably discharged between June 30, 1997, and June 30, 2000 (R.C. 3319.283(A)(1)).	The veteran received an honorable discharge or a medical separation from the Armed Forces (R.C. 3319.283(B)(1)(b)).

The veteran has satisfied one of the following: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Has a letter from a former commanding officer stating the veteran is qualified to teach; 2. Earned a master training specialist certification from the U.S. Navy; 3. Served as a training officer or a lead instructor; or 4. Registration

The bill conditions employment upon completion of a criminal records check, after which the veteran must submit the criminal records check to and register with the Department. The Department must then enroll the veteran in the retained applicant fingerprint database (RAPBACK) in the same manner it would for a licensed teacher.

The Department cannot accept the application of a veteran who has pleaded guilty to, been found guilty of, or been convicted of any offenses prescribed under continuing law that preclude employment in K-12 schools. If the Department receives notification through RAPBACK of the arrest or conviction of a veteran employed as an unlicensed teacher, it must notify the employing district or school. The Department also may take any disciplinary action authorized under law against the veteran as if the veteran were a licensed educator.²

Mentorship

The bill requires a school district or school to assign a licensed teacher to mentor a veteran employed as an unlicensed teacher. The mentorship must last for at least the first two years of the veteran's employment. The mentor must have at least three years of teaching experience in any of grades K-12. If the employer is a district, the mentor also must have received a rating of skilled or higher on the mentor's most recent performance evaluation.³

Veteran may teach core subject area

Continuing law prohibits a school district or STEM school from employing a teacher to provide instruction in a core subject area, unless the teacher is "properly certified or licensed." As an exception to that prohibition, the bill permits a veteran employed as an unlicensed teacher to provide instruction in core subject areas.

A teacher is "properly certified or licensed" if the teacher has completed all requirements for certification or licensure in the subject areas and grade levels in which the teacher provides instruction. Core subject areas include reading and English language arts, math, science, social studies, foreign language, and fine arts.⁴

Law retained by the bill

The bill retains provisions of continuing law that apply to a veteran employed as an unlicensed teacher. Specifically, it:

1. Requires the veteran to complete 15 hours of approved professional development every five years;⁵ and
2. Authorizes the Superintendent of Public Instruction to revoke the veteran's right to teach if, after an investigation and an adjudication, the state Superintendent determines the veteran is not competent to teach.⁶

Veterans currently employed as unlicensed teachers

The bill expressly permits a veteran employed as an unlicensed teacher prior the bill's effective date to remain employed after that date. However, that veteran must meet the professional development requirements under continuing law and comply with the bill's new
