

Opponent Testimony for H.B. 445
Primary and Secondary Education Committee
November 11, 2024

[Kevin Thome, a concerned father]

Chair Gayle Manning, Vice Chair Sarah Fowler Arthur, Ranking Member Phillip M. Robinson, Jr., and members of the Primary and Secondary Education Committee,

Thank you for reading my statement. My name is Kevin Thome. I am a parent of two young children, one whom will be attending kindergarten next fall, and one that will be attending preschool next fall. I am testifying in opposition to House Bill 445, which seeks to alter the well-established system of Released Time Religious Instruction (RTRI) by changing the permissive “may” to “shall” in Section 3313.6022 of the Ohio Revised Code. I believe this unnecessary bill threatens the autonomy of local school boards and undermines constitutional principles. I urge you to oppose this legislation for several key reasons:

When I attended elementary school myself, I attended a private catholic school. My parents were free to choose what school they wanted me to attend and what if any religion I would be exposed to. My parents gave me the choice to decide if I wanted to attend a private catholic high school or attend the local public school. I chose to attend the local public school. I believe this choice is an important freedom. Parents and students already have this choice, to attend catholic schools for a Catholic education, or attend Hebrew school for a Jewish education, and so on for other religions. Those parents who do not wish for their children to be taught religion in school are free to send their kids to public schools, where there is supposed to be separation of church and state. Some parents may not be able to afford private education. There are after school programs for just about any religion in my area where students can go, after school hours, to learn religion.

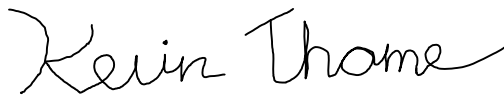

The problem with forcing school districts to adopt an RTRI policy is that every school district is different and unique. I feel that our local elected school board officials, should be the ones making this decision, based on each individual school districts best interests. Public schools should not be forced to allow released time for private religious organizations. These organizations are disruptive to public education, take away time from teachers and school administrators from doing their normal duties, and create a cult like environment where students who attend these private religious organizations during school hours are bribed with candy and t-shirts. Sometimes they are even rewarded for getting friends and other students to attend.

It is concerning that the primary motivation for HB 445 seems to be for nothing more than accommodating the interests of LifeWise Academy, a private religious organization. Allowing a private entity to influence state legislation and public school governance sets a dangerous precedent. It raises significant concerns about the undue influence of corporate interests on public education policy. LifeWise Academy and it’s leadership has been very open about directly pressuring legislators to change state law, not only in Ohio, but every state in the nation. They have already successfully persuaded lawmakers to adopt a “may to shall” language change in Indiana and Oklahoma.

School Ministries Ohio has been “training Ohio leaders to offer Released Time Bible Education” for almost 20 years, “and in 2014 [...] took the lead to educate Ohio’s legislature” and credits themselves with helping not only pass, but in fact writing the current RTRI law. However they did not submit proponent testimony or publicly speak out in support of HB 445. Their silence on this proposed legislation is another factor that strongly reiterates the idea that this is being pushed by and solely for LifeWise Academy specifically.

I ask that you consider my testimony and vote “no” on H.B. 445 because while we should continue to allow local school boards of education to adopt RTRI policies, we should not require them to adopt RTRI policies for the benefit of private entities that are attempting to gain influence.

Sincerely,
