

Before the House Ways and Means Committee House Bill 39 – Earned Income Tax Credit Sponsor Testimony by Representative Michael J. Skindell and Representative Dani Isaacsohn Tuesday, May 9th, 2023

Chairman Roemer, Vice Chair Merrin, Ranking Member Troy and Members of the House Ways and Means Committee, we appreciate the opportunity to provide sponsor testimony on House Bill 39. This legislation makes a portion of the current state Earned Income Tax Credit "EITC" refundable.

A federal EITC was enacted in 1975 and has been expanded over the years with overwhelming bipartisan support, including in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 under President Reagan. The EITC at the federal level, and in most states, is a refundable credit for low- to moderate-income working individuals and couples, particularly those with children. The amount of the EITC benefit is dependent on the recipient's income and number of children. Today, the EITC is one of the largest anti-poverty tools in the United States and is mainly used to "promote and support work."

As you may be aware, after more than ten years of advocacy, the General Assembly enacted a limited state EITC in H.B. 59 in 2013. As enacted at that time, the amount of the state credit equaled 10% of the federal EITC, applied to taxpayers whose Ohio adjusted gross income exceeds $20,000 and Ohio's EITC could not exceed 50% of the tax due. In addition, the credit was nonrefundable, thus it can only result in a reduction or elimination of tax liability, not a refund.

In 2019 under the State Transportation Budget, Sub. H.B. 62, the General Assembly made some updates to the state EITC. First, the credit was increased from 10% to 30% and the income cap, which no other state had, was eliminated. But the legislature kept the non-refundability of the credit. Despite these important changes, Ohio's EITC still remains one of the weakest in the nation.

H.B. 39 makes a portion (10%) of the current state EITC refundable. The impact of making 10% of Ohio's credit encourages work and fights poverty throughout the state. In the report "Refundability Now" published June 4, 2019, Policy Matters Ohio concludes:

Giving taxpayers a 10% refundable option would extend the credit to or make it more valuable for nearly 380,000 filers in the lowest income quintile, increasing the average value of their credit by $248. A 10% refundable option would help an almost 185,000 of those earning between $24,000 and $42,000 (the lower-middle 20%), giving them an average credit of $237. For those in the middle 20%, earning between $42,000 and $63,000, a 10% refundable option would benefit 45,000, with an average value of $352.

Income inequality is a significant problem in this country. Wages have been stagnant or falling for quite some time, in particular for the working poor. The federal EITC, which is refundable, kept 5.7 million Americans—including 3.1 million children—out of poverty in 2011<sup>1</sup>. In this time period, the average refund from the federal EITC in Ohio was $2,238, which can equal two or three months' pay for a working-poor family<sup>2</sup>.

A 10% refundable state EITC would have a significant impact on the long-term economic wellbeing of our low- and moderate-income wage earners and our local and state economies. According to Policy Matters Ohio, the credit boosts family income and assists poor communities by stimulating local economies. Research has found that EITCs increase workforce participation among eligible families and that the refunds help asset building in that families use the refunds to pay off debt, educational expenses and securing decent housing. In addition, a recent study found that an Ohio EITC would significantly help families in rural counties. The fact that Ohio's EITC is not refundable makes it benefit a relatively small portion of working-poor families in the state<sup>3</sup>. Two significant tax credits that go to businesses in Ohio are refundable ones—the historic building rehabilitation credit and the job retention tax credit, yet the state's EITC is not<sup>4</sup>. In addition to the federal EITC, 27 states and the District of Columbia have credits that are refundable.<sup>5</sup>

Making the Ohio EITC 10% refundable will go a long way in reducing Ohio's poverty rate. Chairman Roemer, Vice Chair Merrin, Ranking Member Troy and Members of the House Ways and Means Committee, thank you for your consideration of H.B. 39.

Chairman Roemer, Vice Chair Merrin, Ranking Member Troy and Members of the House Ways and Means Committee, I appreciate the opportunity to provide sponsor testimony alongside my joint sponsor Representative Skindell, on House Bill 39. I especially want to thank Representative Skindell for being a long-time champion of this bill, and the everyday people working to provide for their families.

As a workforce law that has been championed by both Republicans and Democrats since Ford and Reagan first introduced it, a refundable EITC is a public policy win almost every way you slice it: It incentivizes people to work at a time when most businesses are still facing critical worker shortages. It helps reduce the barriers to work, especially for single moms, during a period when women are still struggling to fully return to the workforce amidst an ongoing childcare crisis.

It helps close the gap between the very rich and the people who work every day jobs as cashiers, nurses, and bus operators, at a time when CEOs are making about 300 times what the typical worker makes in most industries, and closer to 1000:1 at some of the Ohio companies that employ the workers who would most benefit from the EITC improvement.

When everyday workers are earning more money at work, the state spends less on other public benefits for those individuals. This policy would reduce healthcare costs for employers and employees alike as inflation continues to be a huge burden for Ohio families. And while here in Ohio we have too many children with not enough to eat, this is a pro-growth policy that simultaneously reduces child poverty. Finally, making the EITC refundable stimulates the economy by putting more money in the pockets of people who spend it closest to home on basic items like food, clothing, shelter, and services.

This is good public policy. It is about getting people back to work and earning more money to provide for their families, and I am proud to sponsor legislation that would allow us to join the majority of states in the country with a policy to boost the paychecks of so many Ohio families.

Ohio has some of the kindest and hardest working people, and they deserve policies that reward their hard work. This is one of those policies. Chairman Roemer, Vice Chair Merrin, Ranking Member Troy and Members of the House Ways and Means Committee, thank you for your consideration of H.B. 39. We would be happy to answer any questions at this time.
