RE: H.B. No. 74 Enact FY 2022-2023 transportation budget

On behalf of the Butler County Regional Transit Authority, we urge the committee to reconsider the proposed support for public transit in the recommended FY 2022-2023 transportation budget.

For years, public transit in Ohio has been withering on the vine as commuters and young professionals demand better transportation options and corporations and small businesses seek reliable transportation for their workforces. All the while, many smaller public transit systems are consumed with the growing need to transport elderly and disabled riders to grocery stores, dialysis, medical appointments and more with fewer and fewer resources.

At BCRTA we have done a lot with very little, but agencies like ours can only be pressed for thriftiness for so long. Eventually, we will be spread so thin that what we must provide is so poor and fledgling it is discounted as incompetent or worse.

The last infusion to the transportation budget was a welcome sign that public transit had not been forgotten and that Ohio valued the needs of those who travel without a car or cannot drive. Unfortunately, it was only a small beginning to what should be a major multi-year commitment. The proposed statewide investment of $7.3 million per year in this budget is wholly inadequate compared to the $63 million provided in the last budget. For reference, BCRTA's annual budget is more than $6 million. Although we understand the importance of reallocating dollars during and following a pandemic, a more than 88% decrease is punitive, unreasonable, and will have long-lasting effects on transit systems statewide.

"But what about all the federal CARES money transit received?" some may ask. CARES is plugging a hole. CARES was a temporary solution to a temporary problem. Although it was welcome assistance for my system and others, it was a one-time shot in the arm to prop up operations while pandemic was raging. For some systems it will continue to be helpful operating assistance for stability until the economy fully rebounds. CARES is not sustaining development of transit systems and it is not addressing capital investment. Most importantly, CARES is not helping agencies leverage their other federal grant dollars that require state or local contribution.

One of the most important functions of Ohio's contributions to smaller transit systems is its ability to match smaller grant dollars from the Federal Transit Administration. Cutting transit funding in this budget cycle as proposed could represent lost federal opportunities for Ohio transit systems. A $50,000 grant from Ohio can leverage another $200,000 for equipment and other capital expenses for BCRTA and other transit systems with access to federal grant dollars. However, if that $50,000 is not available that $200,000 cannot be drawn and could potentially be reallocated elsewhere. In addition, many of these dollars are spent with local dealers and suppliers.

Reducing transit funding will also limit opportunities to fund new equipment and innovative new service opportunities. BCRTA is currently evaluating ways to fund new service to support transportation between local business with limited parking and the new Spooky Nook major sports complex in Hamilton, Ohio. BCRTA staff were considering grants through ODOT, but would be unlikely to be considered in our view due to the high demand for many other systems that are still in great need of replacement buses and other basic state of good repair items to maintain regular service. This new proposed service in Hamilton would help support and drive the local economy, but could be in jeopardy due to this cut or just the many years of divestment in Ohio's public transit that are starving our peers for capital investment. Starving transit starves innovation and local growth.

Please reconsider investing in public transit for those who cannot drive, those who choose not to drive, those who need a ride to work, school, the grocery store, dialysis or their doctors. Public transit in Ohio is a valuable asset and a worthy investment.

Respectfully submitted,

Matthew M. Dutkevicz
