DETAILED ANALYSIS

Criminal records checks – long-term care

The bill narrows an existing exception under the Public Records Law that authorizes the release of otherwise nonpublic criminal records check reports with respect to:¹

1. Applicants for employment with the State Long-Term Care Ombudsman's office or a regional long-term care ombudsman, in a position that involves providing ombudsman services to long-term care residents and recipients;²
2. Applicants for employment with an Area Agency on Aging, a PASSPORT administrative agency, a provider or subcontractor under a Department of Aging program, or a consumer, in a position that involves providing direct care to consumers;³

¹ R.C. 173.27(G), 173.38 (I), and 173.381(G).

² R.C. 173.27.

3. Applicants for and holders of community-based long-term care certificates, contracts, or grants.⁴

Under current law, these criminal records check reports are generally not subject to disclosure under the Public Records Law, but a court, hearing officer, or “other necessary individual” may access a report in a case dealing with (1) a denial of the person’s employment or refusal to issue a certificate, contract, or grant, (2) the person’s employment or unemployment benefits or revocation of a certificate, contract, or grant, or (3) a civil or criminal action regarding Medicaid or a Department of Aging program. The bill’s change addresses the “other necessary individuals” in these cases by stipulating that their access must be pursuant to “a lawful subpoena or court order.” The access by courts and hearing officers is unchanged.⁵

Municipal income tax administration

Under continuing law, a municipal corporation may directly administer and collect an income tax it levies or it may contract with a third party to perform those duties. These third parties may include another municipal corporation, the Central Collection Agency (CCA), the Regional Income Tax Agency (RITA), or a private organization. RITA is a regional council of governments that generally administers municipal income taxes of member municipalities.⁶ CCA is a similar organization formed and operated by the City of Cleveland, though it is not registered or organized as a regional council of governments.⁷ With the exception of the municipal net profits tax, which is administered and collected by the Department of Taxation for any business that opts in for state administration of the tax, municipal corporations maintain discretion to determine whether to undertake tax administration responsibilities or outsource administration to another party. Once chosen, Ohio law imposes various responsibilities on the tax administrator.

One such responsibility is the requirement that a tax administrator order a criminal background check for any employee, prospective employee, or contractor of a municipality or regional council of government that will have access to confidential federal income tax information. The tax administrator must request the Superintendent of the Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation to conduct the criminal records check and must also request criminal records information from the Federal Bureau of Investigation.⁸

⁸ R.C. 718.131, not in the bill.

The bill prohibits any “private individual or entity” acting as a municipal income tax administrator, other than a municipal corporation itself, from having access to any criminal history records. The bill does not clarify who or what qualifies as a private individual or entity. Since RITA is a regional council of government created through statutory authority, it is possible that the bill’s prohibition does not apply to RITA or any other regional council that may serve as a tax administrator. Additionally, the prohibition likely does not apply to the CCA, since the organization is operated by the City of Cleveland and thus unlikely to be considered a private entity. The prohibition does appear to apply to a private organization contracted by a municipality to perform administrative duties.⁹

As indicated above, these private party tax administrators are required to order criminal records checks for anyone associated with the administrator that is considered a “contractor” of a municipality or a regional council of government that handles confidential federal tax information. The bill could be interpreted to prevent such a tax administrator from viewing the contents of those checks. It is unclear whether the municipal corporation that contracts for the private party tax administrator’s services would be responsible for or permitted to review the criminal records checks.
