HB 239 Reduce end-of-course assessments; require testing work groupsRm 12110:00 a.m.Submitted by Mr. Jim O'Connor, Social Studies Teacher, OCSS, VP

Good morning,

Chairperson Jones, Representatives Manning, Crawley and members of the Committee on Primary and Secondary Education. I appreciate the opportunity to give testimony against HB 239 as it is currently written.

My name is Jim O'Connor. I have taught high school Social Studies in Ohio for over 26 years. My degrees are from the University of Cincinnati and Wright State University. I served 20 years in the Ohio Air Force National Guard. I am currently Vice President of the Ohio Council for the Social Studies.

We do believe that Ohio's Seven End-of Course High School Exams should be reduced. HB 239 reduces the seven exams to three: Algebra I, Science and English/Language Arts.

The OCSS believes Social Studies should be on the same level of importance as the other core content areas.

I believe that the most important Government standards can be embedded into the American History standards and state assessment.

The benefits are of having a Social Studies EOC Exam in American History with an emphasis on American Government:

- It maintains the relevance of SS in our high schools. Social Studies is severely marginalized in our elementary schools. In grades K-6, SS is sometimes every other day or on "Social Studies Friday." Ohio students are getting shortchanged in civic education.
- OCSS actually supports the spirit of HB 239 in reducing EOC Exams. An American History EOC Exam with an emphasis on American Government standards would eliminate a separate Government Exam, achieving the objective of this bill.

The OCSS believes Social Studies should be on the same level of importance as the other core content areas.

• Rest assured, what would still be taught and assessed are the Founding Documents of our democracy: the Northwest

Ordinance, the Constitution, Bill of Rights and the Ohio Constitution.

- Around 40 % of the American Government standards are the Constitutional Amendments. These are often best taught in a historical context, such as the Reconstruction Era and Progressive Era Amendments. This can easily be achieved in an American History course and assessment.
- Last of all, when American Government became a state EOC Exam, the course, in many high schools, went from a traditional semester class for seniors to a year-long class for underclassmen. This created unattended consequences such as reducing electives for students such as law studies, psychology or economics.
- American Government needs to be taught at the senior year of high school, when the following are must relevant to our students:
 - Understanding citizen rights and responsibilities
 - Becoming a legal adult
 - Registering to vote
 - Signing up for the Selective Service Act
 - Enlisting in the military

I believe the most important Government standards can be embedded into the American History standards and state assessment.

The OCSS believes Social Studies should be on the same level of importance as the other core content areas.

Thank you, Jim O'Connor Ohio Social Studies Teacher OCSS, VP
