MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Thank you for honoring me with your votes for President of the Ohio Senate. I am very sorry I am not in attendance today, as I believe attendance is the foremost duty of everyone in any endeavor. For those of you who were breathing a sigh of relief at not having to hear a speech from me, I beg your pardon, and promise to keep this written version short.

I can honestly say that I have never before looked forward more happily to a professional challenge as I do now. I believe we have a singular opportunity to solve many current problems and to create a long lasting framework for good government.

To any member of the Senate, if there is a service I can provide you in my position, you need only ask and, if I am fairly able to comply, I shall.

I have a few requests of each of my 32 colleagues:

I ask that you consider that we have unique control in the manner and tone in which this body operates. Those from all parts of the political spectrum understand that their aims are often more easily obtained if we disregard the proper and moral way to treat each other. When our passions are inflamed it is easy to do this.

I ask you, therefore, to refrain from excoriating each other. To first pause before considering requests by outside groups and individuals designed to embarrass or harass your colleagues. And finally to receive the well-meaning criticism and requests of each other in the vein in which they are intended.

When President Lincoln asked that the nation move forward with "malice toward none, with charity to all", the situation they were in was much more grave than anything in our recent past or our near future.

One author said of Lincoln that he had the ability to overcome egotism, to avoid taking things personally, to accept his shortcomings and those of others with equanimity. He was strong willed without being willful, righteous without being self-righteous, and moral without being moralistic.

These are lofty standards. But we have hindsight that Lincoln did not have. And more importantly, a fresh slate that the 134th General Assembly provides.

We may not have Lincoln in our midst, though he once roamed these grounds. But we are not prevented from being like Lincoln in the treatment of each other and the truth.

If you ever begin to doubt that you can live up to those high ideals, please remember: "With God, all things are possible."

MOTIONS

Senator Rob McColley moved that Senators absent the week of Sunday, January 03, 2021, be excused, so long as a written explanation is on file with the Clerk pursuant to Senate Rule No. 17.
